Day 2: Explore Yellowstone & Yellowstone Falls

This morning, your guide will take you to see the Grand Canyon of Yellowstone and Yellowstone Falls. The specifics of the geology of the canyon are not well understood, except that it is an erosional feature rather than the result of glaciation. After the caldera eruption of about 600,000 years ago, the area was covered by a series of lava flows. The area was also faulted by the doming action of the caldera before the eruption. The site of the present canyon, as well as any previous canyons, was probably the result of this faulting, which allowed erosion to proceed at an accelerated rate.

At 308 feet, the Lower Falls is the tallest waterfall in the park. In terms of height alone, it's more than twice the size of Niagara Falls. The amount of water flowing over the falls varies greatly depending on the season.

Although the Upper Falls of the Grand Canyon of Yellowstone is significantly smaller than their lower counterpart, they're just as breathtaking. Standing on the platform at the Brink of the Upper Falls, this 109-foot cascade of surging water will look every bit as powerful as it is.

At the end of your excursion, you will be transferred you back to your luxury camp for the night.
